Entrepreneurship and Innovation in Emerging Markets

New concepts of business inspired by innovations and led by entrepreneurs are changing the world and our lives. The implications are crucial for the emerging market economies, where tremendous growth and opportunity reside. Entrepreneurship and innovation are seen as an integral part of a solution to many challenges facing countries in the region, including providing employment opportunities, spurring economic activities, improving environmental practices, upgrading the industries, and propelling economic growth and prosperity to avoid the “middle income trap.” These changes may also lead to the breakdown of traditional business models, disappearance of old professions and emergence of new ones.

For both local firms and multinationals, entrepreneurship and innovation in emerging markets are no longer just a matter of inspiring employee ingenuity and adapting global products for local budgets and tastes. Increasingly they involve enhancing the sense of ownership, productivity, and R&D activities with an international impact – the development of goods and services for the global markets. Beyond privatization and liberalization, for entrepreneurship and innovation to truly act as a catalyst for further economy growth, it requires radical changes in government policies, the mindset of business leaders, and the pedagogy of educational institutions, before emerging markets can inspire as well as benefit from entrepreneurial activities and innovations. To shed light on these critical issues, we particularly welcome studies about the forces and drivers that shape entrepreneurship and innovation in emerging markets, theoretical and empirical papers, as well as case studies, along with the outlooks for this region and beyond.
