His analyses of the financial situation have had great impact.

Dr Li attaches particular importance to education, and once said that "a leader should not only be well-read and knowledgeable, but must also possess high humanistic qualities". Feeling the responsibility to nurture talents, he enthusiastically provides young people with internship opportunities so as to prepare them to work in society. The Hong Kong Trendy Products Expo "Tianjin Fair", which was jointly organised by the Chinese Manufacturers' Association (CMA) and the Tianjin Municipal Government in June 2015, is an example. A total of 62 students from nine universities visited Tianjin for their field work. They participated in substantive work in the "Tianjin Fair" and gained valuable learning experience. This August, the CMA has again invited 50 students to the 2016 Hong Kong Trendy Products Expo in Dalian.

Dr Li places a high value on cooperation between the business sector and tertiary institutions for nurturing talents. The CMA makes regular donations to tertiary institutions in Hong Kong, and Lingnan University received one such donation in order to establish "The Hong Kong Chinese Manufacturers' Association Information Technology Integrated Learning Centre". A special fund was also set up for supporting students from underprivileged families, recognising academic excellence and providing them with accommodation and overseas exchange opportunities.

Dr Li values education and encourages young people to have a fighting will and spirit, and to devote their best efforts in everything in order to score 101.

Mr Chairman, in recognition of Dr Li Sau-hung's contributions to the tertiary education and the business sectors in Hong Kong, may I present Dr Li Sau-hung to you for conferment of an honorary fellowship.
