Brief Course Description

Value theory, which is sometimes also called axiology, is concerned with the nature and status of value as well as with the differences and relations between distinctive types of value, such as intrinsic and instrumental value, and ethical, aesthetic, and economic values. This course surveys philosophical investigations into these and related topics (e.g., hedonism, theories of well-being, value pluralism).

Aims

To acquaint students with theories on the nature of value and of what makes things and/or lives valuable.

Learning Outcomes

On completion of the course, students will be able to:

- (LO1) Describe the main classical and contemporary theories on the nature of value.
- (LO2) Specify the main points of disagreement among the various conceptions of value discussed in class.
- (LO3) Evaluate the theoretical solutions proposed to the problems that various theories of value address.
- (LO4) Propose and discuss their personal views on the nature of value and on the other issues debated (e.g., whether happiness and/or pleasure are the sole intrinsic values).

Indicative Content

1. Rival conceptions of distinctions between intrinsic, extrinsic, instrumental, final, inherent, and contributive value.
2. Prominent philosophical proposals concerning what is good for its own sake. Hedonism, experientialism, etc.
3. Naturalist and non-naturalist accounts of value.
4. Response-dependence and the status of value; values, dispositions, and observers.
5. Realism, anti-realism, quasi-realism in the theory of value.
6. Disagreement and the semantics of discourse about value.
7. Value pluralism
8. Theories of well-being

Teaching Method

Lectures, presentations, and discussions

Measurement of Learning Outcomes

Students will take/write:

- Short in-class quizzes, in which they will have to answer short questions on the various concepts and theories discussed in class (to assess LO1, LO2, and LO3);
- A final exam, in which they will have to write long essay questions on the content of the course. Students will have to elaborate their views on the theories discussed in class (to assess LO1, LO2, LO3, and LO4);
- A term paper (1500-2000 words) on a topic of the course (to assess mainly LO4). The students will be provided with a list of readings related to the specific topic they choose to write about.

In addition, students are expected to participate in classroom discussions and demonstrate good preparation—for instance, they will have to demonstrate adequate knowledge of the required weekly readings when called by the lecturer (to assess LO1, LO2, LO3, and LO4).

Assessment
